As CIDCO levels land to construct new airport, nearby villages face flooding

NEHA KULKARNI
MUMBAI, JUNE 26

A TEARY-EYED Kanchan Mhatre of Dungi village in Navi Mumbai is hanging out soggy clothes to dry, among a series of other household objects kept out in the feeble sunlight. She blames the City Industrial and Development Corporation (CIDCO) for her misery.

"We have not slept at peace since it started raining on Sunday night. Water flooded half the house, it spoilt my foodgrain, bed, furniture and clothes. When the water didn't recede even on Monday evening, I feared for my young daughter's life. I eventually ran to a friend's house in another village to seek refuge," she says.

While Mumbai saw 10 deaths in over 24 hours during the season's heaviest downpour on Sunday and Monday, residents of Dungi and Pargaon villages in Navi Mumbai say the conditions were terrifying for them, as their houses are located within 100 meters of where CIDCO has started ground-leveling work for building the Navi Mumbai International Airport (NMIA). Residents said the levelling work has blocked drainage channels for the village, causing waterlogging.

may become difficult. "I grow about 20 quintals of rice each year. We cultivate rice between June and September and now is the time for sowing. But our fields already have three to four feet of water, which I fear has spoiled the quality of the soil, making it inappropriate to sow now."

CIDCO is required to fill land to a height of about 5.5 metres before work on the airport can start. In May this year, Dungi and Pargaon villagers had warned CIDCO that they may face flooding during rains due to the ongoing work.

"In spite of being in a low lying area, our village was never flooded before. The authorities have ignored our drainage system while conducting levelling work. This is why we are now having to install pumps to draw out water each time it rains," claims Dhanaji Patil, who shifted with his family to an alternative location in Navi Mumbai on Monday night after their house flooded.

Residents say the stormwater brings poisonous snakes, insects and worms into their houses. Some families of Dungi and Pargaon villages have shifted to Karanjale node where they have had to take houses on rent. Others who cannot afford the rent are building another floor on their homes where they can shift electronic items, kitchen utensils and grain stocks.

"At least 40 to 50 chicken and hens I owned died in the flood. I am not prepared to handle another monsoon," says Vinod Takekar, a resident of Pargaon.

As Dungi and Pargaon villages are not included in the airport area, CIDCO has neither promised to rehabilitate the villagers nor offered them any compensation package.

For residents of another village in Kombudbhuj, there is no respite from flooding. Having experienced waist-deep water on June 9, they refused to move out on Monday. "The school declared a holiday when it started raining heavily. We all refused to move out and tied our vehicles so that they do not get affected. We are living under threat," says Bhashan Koli, a resident of Kombudbhuj.

Prajakta Lavangare, Joint Managing Director of CIDCO, said: "According to the technical study conducted by Central Water Research Institute of Pune, villages around the airport are not getting flooded due to the airport construction work. The storm water from southern side of Navi Mumbai is getting parked here. We had already taken measures to ensure that these villages do not flood by constructing hoarding ponds and making culverts. However, we will observe the situation in these villages during monsoons and take constructive action."

A senior CIDCO official said that though they provide pipes in the villages to drain out excess water, some flooding may happen. "We have opened their culverts and taken the required steps to ensure proper drainage of water. However, as it is a low-lying area, this problem will continue."

15-year-old succumbs to leptospirosis, first death in state this year

TABASSUM BARNAGARWALA
MUMBAI, JUNE 26

A 15-YEAR-OLD boy died from leptospirosis at Sion hospital on Monday, becoming the first victim of the infectious disease in the state this year.

Parab Ramesh Kale, a resident of Milan Nagar at Kurla, was admitted to the hospital on Sunday. His condition worsened within a day. While civic officials maintained that it is a case of suspected leptospirosis death, a polymerase chain reaction test was conducted at the hospital that confirmed that the victim was suffering from leptospirosis.

A student of Class IX, Kale used to travel to his school at Chembur near Vashi naka in heavy rains. He had developed fever on June 22, after he played football in the rain with his friends.

Civic officials said it is suspected that Kale first came in contact with the leptospira bacteria while playing football in the rain. Days later, he manifested symptoms of the infection, mainly headache, chills, body pain and sore throat.

Kurla resident suspected to have picked up infection while playing in rain away on June 25..." an official said.

Health officials claimed that when the first showers began in the city, residents of Milan Nagar were administered doxycycline as precautionary measure. "It is effective for 48 hours. But since the boy had left for school, he missed the dose," a civic official from L ward (Kurla) said.

"The death will be confirmed after the review of the epidemiological investigation committee report," said BMC's executive health officer Dr Padmaja Keskar.

On Tuesday, following Kale's demise, BMC health workers inspected 1,200 households and covered a population of 3,500 people in Kurla East to screen for possible leptospirosis patients. At least one case of fever and four cases of cough were detected.

"But they are not related to leptospirosis infection," a health worker said. The BMC is trying to trace Kale's friends whom he played football with to ensure they have not developed similar symptoms.

So far, data from the state public health department shows that at 11, Mumbai has recorded the maximum number of leptospirosis cases in Maharashtra between January to June. Across the state, 19 cases of leptospirosis have been recorded. "So far, no death has been reported in any other district," said state epidemiologist Dr Pradeep Awate.

The bacterial infection spreads in humans mostly through urine of infected animals that mixes with water and soil and survives for long periods. In Mumbai, cattle and rodents are known to commonly transmit the bacteria.

A BMC report studying the health profile of patients visiting civic hospitals between October 2015 to September 2017 had found that leptospirosis was the ninth most common ailment reported in tertiary care hospitals, including KEM, Sion, Nair and RN Cooper hospitals.

Dengue was the second most common infection that required hospitalisation.

Between March till July last year, the BMC had inspected gashalals for cattle waste management system. It had found that in the 628 gashalals inspected, no protocol was in place to handle cattle waste. In most cases, cattle urine was washed using water that collected on roads, increasing the risk of the bacteria spreading.

There are 82 gashalals in the eastern and 244 in the western suburbs. At 46, Malad (P north ward) has the most number of gashalals in the city.

LLOYD'S ESTATE

Day after cave-in, 45 families return to evacuated building

EXPRESS NEWS SERVICE
MUMBAI, JUNE 26

A DAY after nearly 120 families at Lloyd's Estate in Wadala were forced to vacate their homes fearing that the building could be structurally unsound after the compound wall and a portion of the land slipped into an adjoining pit, around 45 families have returned. This was after the building hired an independent structural engineer who, after inspection, reportedly certified that the building was fit to live in.

On Monday, eight cars were damaged and a few are still stuck in the muck-filled pit of an under-construction building being constructed by Dosti Realty Ltd after the common compound wall and a part of the driveway of the parking lot of Lloyd's Estate caved in on Monday morning following torrential rains.

Meanwhile, the residents plan to approach either IIT Mumbai or VJTI to seek assistance with a geotechnical survey of the building. The residents claim that the builder failed to conduct a geotechnical survey despite the building being built on marshy land.

"After speaking to a few experts in the aftermath of Monday's incident, we have learnt that there is a need to conduct a geotechnical survey. With the builder showing no interest in ensuring our safety, we have decided to approach either IIT Mumbai or VJTI for the same. We will soon write to them after holding a meeting," said Ashwin Deshmukh, a resident of the building.

The resident also alleged that on Tuesday despite the BMC issuing a notice of stop work order to the builder, Dosti Realty Ltd, work on the pit didn't stop. "We had to record a video and show it to the BMC officials to make them believe that their order was being violated. It was only after we gave proof that the civic official intervened and stopped the work at the site," added Deshmukh.

"As we live in the D-wing that is precariously close to the landslide, on Monday we decided to vacate the premises and were living with our relatives.. However, on Tuesday afternoon, the society members posted the certificate issued by the structural engineer on our common WhatsApp group that certified the building as safe and hence we returned," said a resident who did not wish to be named. Meanwhile, two more cars were extracted from the pit on Tuesday and two more are still stuck in the muck.

A statement issued by the society said, "The Wadala Heights Society is moving legally to seek assurance of the safety and structural integrity of the entire area including the Wadala Heights property and to ensure that Dosti Realty does not resume operations at the adjoining site which precipitated the incident of 25th June. The society is looking at this assessment to be certified by a competent independent agency, and furthermore seek compensation and damages from Dosti Realty and hold them accountable."

Dosti Realty Ltd also issued a statement, claiming it was carrying out remedial work. "We are carrying out remedial measures as suggested by the court commissioner Shantilal Jain and accordingly, the work of backfilling and concretisation at the caved in portion is going on under the supervision of our consultants and engineers. On account of natural slope and gravity, certain amount of backfilling is re-settling, which is normal and part of the process. Since the matter is sub-judice, we would refrain from commenting any further."
