Catholics unhappy with Vatican's stand on female priests and bishops

MANOJ RAMAKRISHNAN MUMBA

Catholic women from Num-bai campaigning for equality in the church's religious lile-archy are unhappy with the recently concluded meeting of bishops in the Vatican be-cause the event has not pro-duced a clear statement on the size of ordaining women as priests and bishops. The Women's Ordination Conference (WOC), an inter-national body formed to cam-paign for ordination of women as bishops, priests and deacons in the Roman Catholic Church, said they were "dismayed by the fail-ure" of the meeting to take se-riously the calls to open all or dained posts to women in the 1 A billion strong church. In Mumbal, Catholic women who support the cam-paign, said that the message of women the support the scatholic women the been endorsed. The monthhome important cam-women has not been endorsed by any actual changes. The month-long important meeting was held in October Called the Ordinary General Assembly of the Synod of Bishops', it had been com-pared to Vatican II, a meeting in the 1990s, where far-reach-ing decisions, including the introduction of native lan-guages in religious services to replace Latin, were made by the church.

replace Latin, were made by the church. The latest synod was the culmination of a long process of listening' or smaller meet-ings at local churches and dio-cess (an idea from the cur-rent head of the church, Pope Francis) to discuss new ideas and challenges in the global church. One of the issues on the agenda was the greater

WHAT WOC HAS SAID ...

For the synodal process to retain credibility, it will need to take seriously the full equality of women and LGBTQ+ people in every aspect of church life.

If the synod assembly did not notice the urgent cries, prayers, and hopes of women, or is unwilling to take concrete steps to dismantle church structures and policies that oppress and diminish women, WOC and its supporters will simply need to make themselves even more visible.

While the meeting acknowledged the "wounds women experienced at the hands of the church", it fell short of engaging substantially with the healing of those wounds.

role for women in church ad-ministration. A final meeting to follow up on last month's event will be held in Vatican City in 2024. On October 28, the Vatican released what is called the fi-nal document, a kind of de-laration from the meeting. Re-scritter to the declaration, the

According to women, this means that the church is not ready to walk very far on the question of ordiaining them as priests or bishops. Women are especially angry at the fact that the church has already made concessions for married men to enter the religious hi-erarrhy at lower leavis. In laration from the meeting. Re-acting to the declaration, the WOC said while if supported the meeting's message about the need for the greater partic-ipation of women in religious life and church administra-tion, the indication was that the conversation on women in ner to enter the religious in-erarchy at lower levels. In March 2017, the Mumbai church, for instance, ordained for the first time two men as decome eacons. Deacons are allowed to do
